Conflict between Health Law and Health Care System for Nurses as the Health Care Provider

Gracia Lestari Tindige, Natalia Ratna Yulianti, Linda Fransiska, Yoga Aji Handoko

Satya Wacana Christian University

Abstract

Law is rules established by a governing authority to institute and maintain orderly coexistence. Without law government and their people are not exist. In order to maintain the existence, law covers almost any aspect of living, one of them is health. Indonesian government assured their people health well being in Law no. 23 in year 1992 about health. Further, government runs systems and other laws that supposed to support the health law, but problems are occurred in responding that law. People are not having a clear definition about optimum health status and things covered in the law, the systems run by the government conflict with the real condition in community and health care services quality and quantity. Hence, health care provider sometimes became the victims of the conflict, whereas there’s no adequate law to protect the health care provider in this case the Nurses. As the result, there must be a reformation in the system running now or a further consideration in the health law itself.