ABSTRACT

In this article, the author presents the need for using genogram and a narrative approach in counseling career. The author also described the process of genogram construction step by step to provide knowledge and basic skills for school counselor to helping student to find direction of career choice. In the context of career counseling, genogram can open client insights about themselves and their families, in addition to placing the family as a source of inspiration and expectation in developing plans and determine the direction of career choice of clients for the future.

Keyword: Genogram, Narrative Counseling, Career Choice

Introduction

The development of the life about the career choices of students at school really need to get special attention. Although the effectiveness of career counseling has been demonstrated by a number of research, although there are many indicators that career counseling are effective, but little is known about factors or other appropriate interventions and contribute to the effectiveness of career counseling (Whiston, et al, 2005).

According to Wirtati, (2002); ILO, (2011) founded students don't get optimal guidance and counseling services, including career guidance and counseling from their counselors at school. Proceed with facts from the International Labour Organization reports that up to the year 2006 primarily in the eastern part of Indonesia, 88% of respondents have never received guidance and career counseling (ILO, 2011). It is increasingly asserted that career guidance services field is the most underdeveloped area (Prayitno, 2011).

Many students seem to face a variety of difficulties stemming from the nature of the individual, one of which is the lack of career decision making, or career information (Koumoundourou and Tsousis, 2010). Factors that influence career decision making among others that is (a) lifestyle, includes sex role orientation and life expectations, (b) social economic status, includes occupational status, income, and education parents, and (c) social
